As the debate continues, there seems to be a growing consensus that computers and computing technologies will continue to continue to improve at an exponential rate over the next 50 years. In light of this, leading experts are forecasting that personal computers will soon be obsolete due to the rise in "Internet of Things" (IOT) technology that is making physical products become smarter, more connected and more reliable. According to Gartner, the sheer volume of information that can be tracked, analysed and transported by these connected devices has the potential to render the humble PC and most consumer devices entirely obsolete. "It is inevitable that the popularity of "Internet of Things" technology, and the ideas that it will change the world, will continue to grow. However, it is also important to recognise that "Internet of Things" is more than just the use of "Internet" and "things" as a way to describe the technology. The internet of things really is the interconnection of all "things"," said Gartner research director Ranjit Atwal in the announcement. "There is certainly the potential for a large shift in the IT landscape in the next five to ten years, but it will be driven by the exponential growth of the IOT ideas as well as the dramatic increase in the popularity of connecting every thing to the Internet." Atwal says that these devices will range from controlling heating systems and electrical appliances, to data-driven cars and flying drones. According to a Gartner report, 20 billion internet connected things are expected to be deployed by 2020 with that figure doubling by 2025. Gartner predicts that 40 billion connected things will be in use by 2030. b7e8fdf5c8

For Valentine's Day, I'm recommending that you go the waterfront. That's right — the waterfront of your city — specifically, the downtown waterfront. Here are four reasons you should book a trip to the waterfront on Feb. 14. You'll See Something Different You've seen pictures of the waterfront, and if you're from elsewhere, you're probably familiar with it. But go to the waterfront in your city in late February, and it's a totally different experience. The crowds are smaller, the decorations are smaller, the city feels smaller. Everyone you pass along the way and everyone you talk to is likely from your city, not from outside. You know the people around you. There is a community atmosphere that has nothing to do with the holiday. Chances are you�
