FIFA® is the world's most popular football simulation franchise. FIFA, FIFA, FIFA and FIFA are registered trademarks of Electronic Arts Inc. in the United States and/or the countries where it operates. The FIFA and the FIFA World Football, the FIFA World Cup, and the EA SPORTS FIFA marks are trademarks of Electronic Arts Inc. and are used under license. Disk drive manufacturers typically assemble disk drives by affixing the various disk drive components such as a motor, bearings, a head disk assembly (HDA) and a disk media to a spindle. The motor allows the disk to be rotated. The bearings support the rotation of the spindle. The HDA holds one or more heads. The heads allow the transducing of magnetism from the media to an electrical signal. The disk media is a magnetized platter that holds the data. To affix the component to the spindle, a majority of the component assembly includes a spindle hub and a spindle ring. As shown in FIG. 1, spindle hub 10 includes a spindle plate 12. Spindle plate 12 is typically a flat metal plate. Spindle plate 12 has a first side 14 and a second side 16. Spindle plate 12 is typically rectangular. Spindle plate 12 may be constructed from a number of components, including, for example, a steel bar and a steel ball. A circular hole 20 is drilled into spindle plate 12 on side 16. A cylindrical protrusion 22 extends radially out from hole 20. Spindle plate 12 is attached to a spindle hub 10 with an interference fit. Spindle hub 10 also includes an inner ring 24. Inner ring 24 has a circular hole 26 on a first side 28. Inner ring 24 is typically attached to spindle plate 12 with an interference fit. A spindle ring 30 is then inserted into hole 26 to form a portion of a disk drive. A first ferrule 32 extends out from the first side 28 of spindle ring 30. A second ferrule 34 extends out from the second side 16 of spindle plate 12. First ferrule 32 and second ferrule 34 are typically constructed from stainless steel. In order to assemble a disk drive with a spindle hub and a spindle ring, an interference fit is maintained between spindle hub 10 and spindle ring 30. First ferrule 32 and second ferrule 34 are inserted into hole 26 in spindle ring 30 to secure spindle ring 30 to spindle plate 12
