* Adobe Stock: This image-sharing site for high-quality images offers many free pictures, including nature and landscape images, as well as pro-quality, high-resolution images for purchase. You can get images for a variety of popular categories, including clothes, pets, travel, sports, weddings, people, and vehicles. For more on Adobe Stock, see Book IV, Chapter 3. * Adobe Stock libraries: You can save stock images as a Photoshop action or as an action step in a Photoshop action. By using the action steps, you can dramatically reduce the time it takes to use images. For more on using actions, see Chapter 11. ## Working with Layers in Photoshop The heart of Photoshop is its `_layers:_` a collection of invisible and visible areas that collectively show a completed image. The areas (the `_layers_`) and the group of layers (the `_stack_`) that make up a Photoshop file are generally known as the `_image_ _file_`, and a group of layers are called a `_layer_ _group_`. Photoshop offers many ways to help you organize and manipulate your layers. To create a new layer, navigate to the Layers panel and click the New Layer button. (Ctrl+N or Shift+Ctrl+N.) Layers are grouped into layers and used for many purposes:

- * They provide an organized representation of a completed image. You use layers to create and fine-tune details in a photo, such as transitions or special effects.
- * You can use layers for painting and drawing.
- * You can draw on a layer or its mask to create special effects in a transparent image or to create a drawing.
- * You can use masking or other effects to select and move layers.
- * You can use layer masking to adjust for a masking problem that's making an image unprintable.
- * You can use groups of layers (that is, a layer stack) to create special effects. For example, layers in a group can display three different photographs (it's like having three separate layers in one file).
- * You can mix layers from several files into one Photoshop file for one project or one image. You can create a new file from the layers you want in an image file. You can also use layers in an image file to use in other image files. * You can insert layers in an existing image file in

For this roundtable, we asked a range of Photoshop users from the local Georgia Hackerspace to share their answers to the questions below. Are you a Photoshop user? Share your experience by emailing us at tips@linuxjournal.com with your suggestions for questions or answer.

1. What is your Photoshop experience? SJA: I've been using Photoshop since 2005 when it first came out. I built my first website with it in 2006, and have been doing web design since. MC: I've been using PS since the early 2000s, when I started using it to fill requests from customers on a $10/month account. I ditched PS for the then-new GIMP in 2006, which I still use today. DD: I have been working professionally with Photoshop since 1997. I've taught Adobe Photoshop classes in person and online at both local and national levels (my students are in several countries). RW: I've been using Photoshop since 2002. I started with Elements and later moved to the full version. I still primarily work with Elements, although I use the full version now and then. 2. What makes you choose Photoshop over any other software? MC: I became a photographer. Back then, I couldn't find anything that handled RAW files adequately. So I jumped to the full version of Photoshop. SJA: I first used Photoshop to edit my photos, and then to create work for clients when my DSLR camera broke. DD: It's the tool of choice for modern web designers. RW: The speed of Photoshop compared to other programs: I can adjust the look of a page in a matter of hours, and I get to see the result instantly. 3. What is your Photoshop workflow? MC: PS is my first tool for every project, no matter what it is. SJA: My workflow is somewhat fluid, but I have a habit of starting with the tools I know, and eventually finish with the ones I need. DD: I'll typically start with the what I like: photoshop or Illustrator. I feel Photoshop is better at most of the things I like to do. RW: Photoshop is my entry-level tool. I use the tools I'm familiar with (Photoshop and PageMaker) for that job. I use Illust 05a79cecff

11 Ridiculous Rules to Ban at Work Guess what? According to research, many people are actually killing productivity at work. 1. No Shoes in the Office How many times have you heard that rule in the office? Why is it there? In fact, the rule is entirely bunk. Studies say that 89% of the productivity at work happens outside the office. People are stressed in the office, so they're not as efficient. That doesn't mean you have to take your shoes off. Make sure you are productive in the office, but stress management techniques can help you focus more and feel more relaxed. 2. No Computer at Work Don't you find it weird that many people work without a computer? We all have our smartphones, and the most common things we do on our computers is scrolling through our Facebook newsfeed. It's very likely that you are using the computer to scroll through Facebook, not necessarily to work. Do the majority of your work from home? The only time you need to use a computer in the office is if you have a work-related task. You can set up reminders on your phone to get to work earlier and manage projects. 3. No Talk Your office might be a time to unwind, but try using your quiet time for work. Delegate projects to others, too. They might not be as good at it as you are. If you are alone, it's an excellent time to think clearly about how you can improve your work. 4. No Instagram, Twitter, or Facebook If you're working from home, the temptation might be too great to check your feeds. It's very possible that you will be drawn back into the digital world during your work day. Your work will need to be put aside if you think that you're only going to see work updates. It's better to focus on your work, rather than to think about how many likes you got on your latest photo. 5. No Tweeting I know this rule is completely silly. Why are you even thinking about posting jokes or requesting stories on Twitter while you're at work? Tweets are listed on your colleague's computer monitor, and they might even see it! You're a grown-up, so treat your co-workers like an adult and keep your mouth shut
